Intimations.

CHAMPAGNE.

VIN BRUT, ROYAL CUVÉE, LEMOINE.
AS SUPPLIED TO
H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES,
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH,
H.I.M. THE LATE EMPEROR FREDERICK OF GERMANY.

THE special feature of this Wine is that it is fermented juice of the grape solely, without the addition of any syrup or liqueur of any kind.
A DRY CHAMPAGNE, to be palatable must be made of the finest raw material.—A SWEET CHAMPAGNE can be made of almost any material. The excessive quantity of sugar in the latter masks completely its original character.
NATURAL CHAMPAGNE will agree with persons to whom the Sweetened Champagnes are injurious; it is a true stimulant to mind and body, rapid, volatile, transitory and harmless. This Natural Champagne is recommended as being really dry, not by means of artificial additions, but because in the natural process of fermentation has been completed.

BRIGANDAGE IN TONKIN.

THE ATTACK ON MESSRS ROQUE'S PARTY.
Le Courrier d'Haiphong of the 12th January gives the following details with regard to the murder of M. Roze and the capture of Messrs Roque's party by pirates.—It is well known that the Government granted last year to M. Victor Roque, shipowner in Haiphong, a vast agricultural concession—about a thousand hectares (2,400 acres)—situated at the entrance of the valley of Luocnam on the route from Dong-trieu to Nam-maw, and about five miles distant from the military post and the village of Dong-trieu. In that concession, M. Roque installed 150 to 200 Chinese families divided into two villages, one composed of Buddhists and the other of Christians. For some time past many difficulties have cropped up, and the resident of the Province withdrew from M. Roque the power given him to have 60 rifles in his possession to enable the Chinese to defend themselves in case of attack. About two months ago he appointed M. Laborde to superintend the work on the concession. On Monday, 6th inst., M. Victor Roque, his brother, Mr. Henri Roque, Pore Arallano, Spanish Dominican; M. Roze, shipping master of the firm of Roque; M. Blythe Costa, proprietor, Haiphong; and Wing Fat-chong, comprador of the firm of Roque, left for Dong-trieu in the Agnes, with the intention of visiting the concession to transact certain business. They arrived safely, and on Wednesday night they lodged in the house of the chief man of the Muong village of Ben-chau situated on the border of the concession. The conduct of the Mayor in all this affair, it may be remarked, seems very suspicious. Messrs Henri Roque, Roze, Laborde and Baptiste Costa slept in a large room facing the entrance door, while M. Victor Roque and Father Arallano slept in a back room. About half-past eleven o'clock the house was invaded; shots were heard and there was a great shouting. M. Roze made for the courtyard, and almost on the threshold of the door, he received two shots, fired point-blank at him from a Mauser rifle and a shot from a fowling-piece. He fell mortally wounded and was struck afterwards with a pike on the back.

Messrs Henri Roque and Laborde defended themselves energetically against the pirates. M. Costa allowed himself to be made a prisoner without resistance and was tied up. M. Henri Roque received a blow with a stick on the head which caused blood to flow. M. Laborde's right arm was broken with a blow from a stick, while he also received several slight wounds with a lance, and a blow on the head with a stick. Not being able to struggle any longer Messrs Henri Roque and Laborde took refuge in the back room where were Messrs Victor Roque and Father Arallano. The robbers then set fire to the place; after more than a quarter of an hour, preferring to run the risk of being killed in attempting to fly rather than be roasted in the room of which the matter was all on fire, Messrs Roque, Father Arallano and M. Laborde rushed out and fell on the pirates. Father Arallano succeeded in passing through the middle of them, and fled in his night dress towards Dong-trieu, being in his night hidden under some high bushes. On reaching out M. Laborde was surrounded. He defended himself desperately, but the camp-bed on which he was standing broke and he fell. At this moment, however, the fire got possession of the whole house, and his assailants, fearing to be burned, fled in great haste. A few instants after M. Laborde succeeded in getting out and ran to the military post at Dong-trieu to warn the Commandant of what was going on at Ben-chau.

About six o'clock in the morning the detachment from Dong-trieu arrived in the village, which they found abandoned, not a single resident to be seen. On the door of the Mayor's house they found M. Roze stretched out, still breathing. He died while being carried to Dong-trieu.

M. Laborde and Father Arallano arrived at Haiphong on Thursday last week, bringing with them the body of M. Roze, who was buried next day. Le Courrier does not think that this attack is a proof of the recrudescence of piracy, but attributes the affair to the treachery of some of the workmen, who were discontented with the way in which they were treated by Wing Fat-chong. It is said, moreover, that quite recently some 30 Chinese Christians belonging to the concession came to Haiphong to complain to M. Roque that the promises made to them when they were hired had not been kept. They accused Wing Fat-chong of not paying them what was due to them and of giving them insufficient money for food. It was for this reason that Messrs Roque went to make an enquiry on the spot, and it appears that M. Roze in particular discovered in the course of the enquiry, proof of the bad faith of Wing Fat-chong, whom he reproached. During the day Wing was seen several times speaking with the Mayor of the village of Ben-chau, and he passed the night of the attack in the house where the Mayor, who had given up his own house to Messrs Roque, temporarily installed himself. There is therefore a strong suspicion that the conspirators were an accomplice and that his object was revenge.

The latest news in Le Courrier is to the effect that the Resident of Haiphong had arrived on the Roque concession with 50 militia, and had found it deserted. Do-fo-chien was sent to scour the country in

HONGKONG LITERARY SOCIETY.

LECTURE ON ART.
At the usual fortnightly meeting of the Hongkong Literary Society last night, Dr. Cantelli presiding, a lecture, under the title of 'Art: its principles and practice,' was delivered by Mr. D. E. Caldwell.

Mr. Caldwell began by explaining that the adoption of the above subject for his lecture was due to the suggestions of friends who thought the experience he had acquired in his own devotion to art might enable him to say something of interest and use to the Society; but when he came to consider the wide field which the lecture would have to cover he was alarmed not a little at his own tenacity. After giving several definitions of 'Art' he said it would be seen that beauty which came from the hands of man was art, while that which came from the Creator was nature. The lecturer claimed for art a wide and far-reaching influence on the progress of humanity. In reply to the question 'whence comes it?' he said he believed the love of the beautiful was natural to man, and traced evidence of this in the rude efforts at personal adornment, the use of colours and the carving of weapons of war and the chase which were found even among savages. What was the use of art? the utilitarian asked, in reply to which question the lecturer quoted Goethe, Schlegel and others. The mission of art was surely a high one, he remarked, if it was to check what was brutal in human nature, and to give us the sweetness and light which formed the essence of the purest teaching man had ever known. (Applause.) Proceeding to deal with the question as to where true beauty lies, the lecturer showed how a true appreciation of beautiful objects depended on the education of the eye, which must precede that education of the hand necessary to the artist. The education of the eye constituted the chief difference between barbaric art and the art of civilization, and he went on to distinguish between a doubt on canvas and a great work of art. Yet few people recognized the importance of educating the eye; few even among those who professed to give instruction in art. Speaking from his own experience, for he means as he said to go to England to draw in pencil and crayon; two of his masters were men of some distinction, and both by a peculiar coincidence had been selected by the Queen to illustrate her works, but their teaching was only such as produced mechanical drawings, and he said he had no attempt to show wherein beauty lay. The fact was that few great artists in England would accept pupils. In France it was different, and hence the great influence of the French School on modern English art. Most people were content to admire or ready to condemn a picture without troubling themselves about any reason except that the work either pleased or displeased them. Even with the photographs of their friends they would admire some and not others, apart from any feeling with regard to the persons photographed; and if they were to try to discover why one pleased them more than another they would find it was due to some grace of line or balance of light and shade or something else that could be explained by some rule of art. They all knew the rule of the bow of pottery, and that if they got a good piece they found pleasure in its contemplation; but did they know why it afforded them pleasure? If they were asked the question how they could tell if it was because of its broken colour, and broken colours were the most harmonious. It was due precisely to the recognition of that rule that colours in dress had changed so very much of late. Where were these marvellous greens, those extraordinary reds and those brilliant blues which we have seen? They had given way to old gold, crushed strawberry, tawny, ootta and so on. Let them not think this a matter of little importance, for 'The whole world without art and dress would be but one great wilderness.'

Passing on to speak of the forms which art takes, the lecturer said it rested in the largest structures formed by human hands and equally in the most minute of visible things; in St. Peter's at Rome and in the diamond butterfly which graced the golden hair of the pet of society. It is in almost every conceivable material capable of taking an impression from the hammer, the graving tool, the pencil or the brush. Within the limits of a lecture it was impossible to deal with the many forms in which art manifested itself, and he had therefore selected pictorial art in relation to the decorative arts, perhaps the most familiar and the most interesting to his audience. Ruskin, the greatest critic that has ever lived, said with reference to this subject: 'The first great mistake that people make in the art of painting is the supposition that they must see a thing if it be before their eyes.' But to see things as they actually exist and to retain a truthful impression of them the eye must be educated and the habit of observation cultivated. Numbers of examples of this regard and incorrect notions which people had of familiar things might be given. By intelligent and careful observation features would be seen in even the most familiar scenes which had never been noticed before. The artist must have the real nature of the thing he paints vividly impressed on his mind before he could hope to reproduce them. When the time came for him to make use of his store of impressions by putting them on canvas he had to 'compose' them so that they might form a self-sufficient picture. Some of the greatest pictures were of the simplest composition. Millet's 'Angelus,' which was sold the other day for £22,000, was one of these. Coming to the more practical part of his lecture, Mr. Caldwell proceeded to illustrate by the aid of a blackboard and a piece of chalk the rules of linear and atmospheric perspective and the various forms of composition in landscape drawing.

At the request of the Chairman Mr. Caldwell kindly consented to deliver a second lecture on Wednesday evening next, under the title of 'The Elements of Perspective.'

A cordial vote of thanks was awarded to the lecturer.
